Yesterday was to have been an eventful day, according to Wiggins, the weather man, and James A. Buck, of New York. Buck predicted that the sun would cease to shine in the afternoon, and the world, would be left in total darkness for seven days. At the expiration of that period he said cyclones, lightning, and whirlwinds would sweep over the face of the earth, killing all living beings and annihilating every structure. He was kind enough to qualify the prediction by adding that if the sun did not cease to shine on Friday it certainly would the next day (to-day). Wiggins announced that a terrible hurricane would sweep down the Atlantic ceast yesterday and destroy everything within reach. Up to midnight neither prediction had been verified. and James A.
